

UNDERSTANDING GRIEF & LOSS

EMPOWERING PROFESSIONALS TO MEET THE NEEDS OF GRIEVING KIDS

ABOUT "UNDERSTANDING GRIEF & LOSS"

Grief is a universal human experience, and yet many individuals, professionals, and organizations do not have the education or training on best practices to respond to a death or other significant loss. These educational workshops are intended for professionals working with children and teens in schools, nonprofits, and clinical settings. Through our Understanding Grief & Loss series, we explore a variety of issues related to death and loss, grief and its impact, and how individuals, families, and organizations can create a more compassionate, empathic, and supportive community.

ABOUT THE WORKSHOP

Risk factors are significant for children grieving a loss, but research points to caring, empathic relationships as being key for intervention. Yet, many of us lack an understanding of how to respond, which drives a cycle of disconnection and isolation. How can we develop the art of the empathic response that creates an environment that reduces risk factors? This workshop will explore the risk factors, issues around grief and loss, adversity, and how empathy is critical for creating a more caring, supportive environment for grieving children and families.

WORKSHOP OBJECTIVES

This workshop will provide participants with the opportunity to:

- Define grief and the various types of loss, and identify common misconceptions.
- Explore factors that influence the grief process.
- Describe the factors influencing grief responses.
- Identify signs of grief in adults and children in multiple settings.
- Explain the difference between habitual and empathic responses.
- Examine the skills to create an empathic presence.
- Describe activities that assist children coping with loss.
